Hello, I’m Susan from the U.S. and I came to Osaka three months ago. I’m 18 years old and I enjoy living in Osaka because people are kind and friendly, the weather is nice, and the food is so delicious. I’m living with my host family, Mr. and Mrs. Sasaki and their daughter, Kyoko. They take me to many places such as Tennoji Zoo, Kaiyukan Aquarium, USJ, and Namba. Life in Japan is so good for me.

Then one day, Mrs. Sasaki took me to the supermarket. I was surprised to see how small the supermarket was in Japan because supermarkets in America are very big. Everything in Japan is very small including houses, streets, parks, and cars. But in the supermarket, I was so surprised that even vegetables were so small. The first small vegetable I saw was a cucumber. You use a cucumber when you make “kappamaki” or “a cucumber roll” in English. An American cucumber is about 4 or 5 times bigger. The next small vegetable I was surprised at was a green pepper. An American green pepper is about 4 times bigger.

I don't think small vegetables are bad because they taste good and fit nicely in a refrigerator. Then I was so surprised to see a very big vegetable. It was the first time to see such a big vegetable. I asked Mrs. Sasaki what it was and she told me it was called “hakusai.” I said to myself, “Why is it so big? I can't put even one hakusai in my refrigerator.”

After we got home, I asked her what she was going to make for dinner. She said, “I'll cook curry. Kyoko likes curry so much.” Again, I was surprised because she was only 9 years old. In America, only adults eat spicy food like curry. And when I ate curry for dinner that night, I knew why Kyoko liked curry. Japan has sweet curry and it is very delicious.

Mr. and Mrs. Sasaki are going to take me to Kyoto this weekend. They say that Kyoto has many old temples and shrines but I'm not so interested in history. I want to go to USJ again but I can't say that to them. I think I'll study Japanese history before I go to Kyoto.
